For many of us, September means back to school. Some of us may feel nostalgic about school supplies and new school outfits and our favorite games at recess. Of course, this year it is going to be a little different with most of the students starting classes online.

My memories of grade school are especially vivid, since I volunteer at the place where I went to third and fourth grades: Reid School, our very own Deschutes Historical Museum of today. For first and second grades I attended Thompson School (now Amity Creek) right across the street, and it was exciting to move into the “big kids’ school.” For third grade I had Miss Ramsey, and we were in what is now the second floor homestead room. My sister Sharon had Miss Parrot when she was in second grade. Miss Parrot and Miss Ramsey were young first-year teachers, and we thought they were wonderful. We would see them together after school and assumed they were best friends. We were so sad when they didn’t come back the following year. In our youthful, romantic imaginations we figured that they got married.

A History of Wong’s Herbs
by Stephanie Swierkos

Anyone familiar with Bend prior to 2002 might recognize a small business called Wong’s Herbs, a local Chinese herb shop. Opened in 1938 by then 25-year-old Richard W. Wong, it quickly became a staple of Bend residents. Called “Doc Wong,” he offered remedies to cure gas pains, ulcers, asthma, and many other ailments. The shop moved to 328 Bond St. in 1946 where it remained until its closure.

Richard raised his family of 7 in Bend until 1964. With no American training recognized by the Federal Drug Administration, Richard was twice arrested for practicing without a license; once in 1958 after telling an investigator to take Pepto Bismol and again in 1964. After his second arrest he was fined $208 and given 10 days in jail. Shortly after Richard’s second arrest, the shop was taken over by his nephew Henry Yee.

Henry Yee was subject to a life of tragedy and conflict. Henry was born in Detroit in 1920, the third child to Jackson and Ongsee Yee, laundry owners. Henry’s oldest brother Jack died after falling into a laundry basin filled with boiling water. After losing everything to the depression, the Yee family moved to China. Shortly thereafter, Henry’s father became ill and passed away. Henry returned to California at the age of 14 to provide financial support to his mother. Henry was drafted in 1942 and

Hobo Quilt Info by Georgia Springer

The time period of the 1930s in this country that found men wandering the country, usually via empty railroad cars, has always intrigued me. Prior to the introduction of the Interstate Highway System of the 1950s, freight rail lines provided a reliable network to work opportunities like lumberyards, sawmills, meat packing plants, and factories all over the country. Itinerant men known as “hobos” would get off the railway cars and search for work and/or food. This lifestyle was dangerous and chaotic. Before they traveled to their next destination, they often would leave a symbol for those that came behind them as to the probability of finding work or a friendly home where they could get a sandwich before traveling onward. These travelers carved these symbols in a fence post or drew them in the ground with a stick. Not surprisingly, this practice became most common during The Great Depression, and was a way for hobos to stay connected.

To make my quilt (picture above), I referred to a book entitled Hobo Quilts by Debra G. Henninger that depicted many of these symbols in the form of quilt blocks, and I used the patterns. I used fabrics that I wouldn’t ordinarily use but reflected fabric that might have been found in a sewing basket of that time period or a bag of outgrown or discarded clothing. This included plaids or stripes or small flowers. For the backing of the quilt, I made sure to use lots of different scraps of fabric because yardage enough to back a quilt would have been rare. There wasn’t a lot of money for food, much less for new fabric in big pieces. I also bound the quilt in more scraps of fabric for the same reason. I included a couple of “turn around” blocks; the placement of the block would mean one thing but if that block were reversed it would mean the opposite.

This project got me to thinking of how differently homelessness is treated now as opposed to how it was treated during those challenging times.
1913 Bend Emblem Toast Inspires Staff

During the quarantine of March, then April, then May, museum staff worked largely from our homes. During that time, the announcement that the City of Bend reached the Emblem Club’s goal of a population of 100,000 brought a renewed focus on the Emblem Club and while sorting through the archives, the staff found inspiration in the club’s 1913 toast. It spoke to our troubled times and the courage to move forward.

Now, you can share that inspiration with our new greeting cards and a limited time offer for t-shirts! Greeting cards are available now at $2.50/each. T-shirts are offered as a limited time pre-order using the form found at the back of the newsletter or online at deschuteshistory.org. Pre-orders for the shirts will be taken through September 22, 2020 and will be available for pick-up or mail delivery approximately October 15. You can also order by calling the museum at 541-389-1813.

Centennial Celebration of Women’s Suffrage Continues

The Centennial of the 19th Amendment continues with a temporary exhibit of 14 art quilts on display throughout the Deschutes Historical Museum. Previously featured in the virtual Sisters Outdoor Quilt Show and most recently displayed at Beacham’s Clock Shop in Sisters, it was hung at DHM in time for the August 26 anniversary.

Over 20 quilters from six guilds contributed to the exhibit, which also includes a color pamphlet detailing each quilt.

Thank You to Bill Olsen

Bill Olsen has been a member of the DCHS Board for many years, but now he is stepping down due to changes in his work schedule and other commitments. Born and raised in Bend, Bill has been a valued asset to the board. With his knowledge of old-time Bend, he has been able to advise the board on matters that affect our membership. He understands what is important to us and what should be preserved. Thank you, Bill! We will miss you as a board member and hope to see you in the future as a friend of the DCHS.
I hoped I would have Mrs. Klinghammer for fourth grade because my older sister Lorna had her, and she taught her students how to knit. At recess some of the girls sat on the big rocks that were on the southeast corner of the building, working on their knitting: knit two, purl two, over and over. I couldn’t wait to learn how. However, I didn’t get placed in that class. Instead I had Mrs. Fox, who was very strict. No knitting there. But the fun part was P.E. once or twice a week with Miss Conroe, who came over from the high school to teach us. We would cross the street to use the Thompson School gym. My favorite was when we had square dancing and reels, and we even learned the schottische. It was a good excuse to hold hands with my fourth grade boyfriend.

Reid School looked pretty much the same as it does now. The little drinking fountain by the office is still there, and the restrooms are in the same area. There were three or four classrooms on the first floor and four on the second floor. The office on the way up to the third floor is where the special education teacher worked. The floors creaked then as they do now. There was no quiet way to sneak downstairs to the office or to use the bathroom. My mother went to school in that building in 1919, only five years after it was built, and she said it still looked the same when my sisters and I were in school there in the 1940s.

At the time I attended Reid School, we could still use the third floor for assemblies. There was a small auditorium that was used for performances and school-wide programs. Mary Jane Newton, longtime supporter of DCHS, was my Bluebird leader, and she came up with the idea of a Punch and Judy show. She received permission for us to perform it for the whole school. We thought it was hilarious at the time, but in recent years it has been banned for being too violent. I played the part of Mr. Punch, who was always smacking his wife, Judy. It was considered slapstick, but in retrospect it was definitely a violent play. I’m sure we received merit badges for our performance.

My recess time was taken up with tetherball. I loved it but never seemed to win. I lived close to the school so after school was out, I would check to see if the janitor forgot to take the tetherball inside. Sometimes I lucked out and practiced throwing that ball as high and fast as I could. The person who can hit the ball hard enough to wind it around the pole wins. No matter how much I practiced, Genny Hammer and Sharon Wachter still beat me.

While the girls played tetherball, the boys played marbles. There were some serious marble shooters at our school, and some managed to make it to citywide competitions. Ricky Thompson and Don Wachter were two of our champions. The museum staff has promoted marble tournaments in recent years, and they sell bags of marbles in the gift shop.

As we gear up for the start of this school year, let’s hope that it will soon be safe for our students to return to the classroom.   by Sue Fountain
